with Mike Marinus

Live Event:

This discussion concerned the treatment of babies, emphasising the safety and effectiveness of manual care for infants and children, while highlighting the importance of evidence-based practice. Research data from recent studies supports the safe and effective use of these treatments, particularly for conditions like plagiocephaly and torticollis.

The importance of communication is a key theme, with a focus on involving the entire family in understanding and participating in the care process. The discussion highlights the role of clinic environments and non-verbal cues in communicating trust and comfort to families. Addressing parental stress and its impact on infants is also crucial, underscoring the need for holistic care that includes both parent and child.

This discussion highlighted the importance of integrating evidence-based practice with effective communication. I am reassured by the growing body of evidence for paediatric care, and feel better able to involving parents and caregivers in the treatment process.
