TREATING UNSETTLED BABIES

Summary

This discussion approached the treatment of infants from a slightly unusual perspective - instead of fixing a label of, for example, "colic" to a set of symptoms, it looked at "unsettled" babies and how a practitioner might address the problem. A number of treatment options were explained and demonstrated, and it was also made clear that practitioners needed to keep within the scope of their training and be alert to signs indicating the need for referral elsewhere.

Advice that can be offered to parents was explained, including the rationale for it, and available/emerging evidence for the benefit of manual therapy was also discussed.
